Sport has nowadays become a relevant social phenomenon and we have the moral duty to change its concept, to foster its practice and to take care of its execution and delivery.

Sport and its strictly connected physical activity have a direct relationship with people's health and wellness and are a relevant factor for integration, socialization and the sharing of social culture.

Sport plays a central role in the education and training of young people and should be considered as a lever for the development of social values.

Sport is therefore the only real cross-activity which is addressed to everybody: it represents a world of emotions that can significantly impact on different contexts.

This special feature of Sport should be encouraged by trying to involve every player in order to develop shared objectives.
